Dear Parents,

1 Medical Research on 'Family Influence on Adolescent Eating Habits'

A healthy diet is crucial in preventing obesity, cancer, cardiovascular and other chronic diseases for both adults and adolescents. Family has an important influence on the eating habits of adolescents. To address the unhealthy eating habits of adolescents in Hong Kong, the research team from the Li Ka Shing Faculty of Medicine of the University of Hong Kong is conducting an online survey to determine the dietary understanding, attitudes and practices and associated family factors among secondary school students.

The Li Ka Shing Faculty of Medicine of the University of Hong Kong is recruiting Form 1 to 6 students (aged 12 to 19 years) and their parents to participate in this research. Each participating student and one parent will be invited to complete an online survey. All information collected will remain confidential and used for research purposes only. Families who are interested in participating in this research can use the QR code on the notice to register. Families who complete the questionnaire within three months will receive a shopping voucher worth HKD 100 as a token of appreciation.
